My kid's mother would like a word with you.

He has a you-folks-like memory. And his ESL tutor already considers me an odd influence.

"Is there a new zombie song today Taunta????"

"Yep, it's good today."

"Yay!"

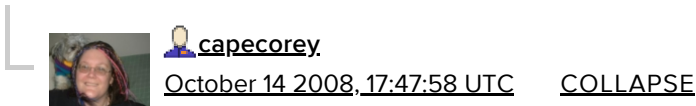

Songs are a great way to learn a language! And this one is full of office-friendly expressions. So it's like ESL and vocational education at once!

(Tell him people don't literally eat your brains at work. Not literally. Not at most workplaces.)

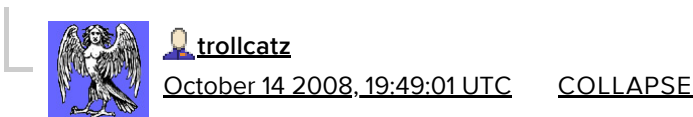

(Just at ours.)

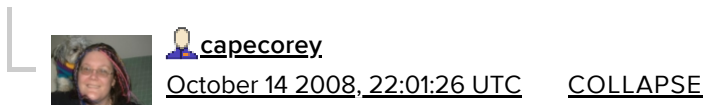

(He'll be sad... not even zombie pirates?)

Tom Leher, Tom Smith, TMBG... you should hear his note perfect "Plagiarize."

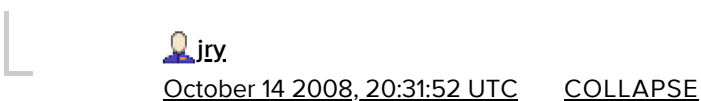

If you're lucky enough to get hired as a pirate, you should definitely be wary of possible zombies. Or try as soon as possible to become one, depending on your pirate ship.

My SAT scores weren't good enough to qualify me for the undergrad program for pirates, alas. So tell him to study hard! (Especially math, because pirates have to be able to divide the booty fairly.)

Will do, wise one! The lad ia 7, the golden aaarge for it all.

'you should hear his note perfect "Plagiarize."

That sounds like a youtube video that would win the internet.

Okay, mummy acrobats. But still.

WOW.

Okay, I gotta get even more religious about my PT.

how can you tell the difference between a zombie and a mummy? they seem to inhabit very similar niches in the field...

Zombies wear whatever they were buried in. Mummies... Oh. Hmm. I'll keep working on this.

There's your difference. Zombies' niches are in fields; mummies have niches in pyramids.

I thought it was that zombies' niches are in the fields, and mummies' niches were in the pyramids...

...at least until the graverobbers and/or archaeologists came along.
